President Roosevelt Extends Modified U. S. Banking Holiday

Washington. — By proclamation, President Roosevelt extended the modified United States banking holiday indefinitely, exercising the powers conferred upon him by congress in emergency banking legislation which he had signed earlier.

The chief executive also proclaimed an extension of the embargo on gold.

All the provisions of the proclamation were continued in full force and effect. This meant also a renewal of the ban on hoarding.

The proclamation is to remain effective until ended by another proclamation.

The president said, "All the terms and provisions of the Macaulay proclamation and all regulations issued thereunder continue in full force and effect."

It is understood the purpose is to give the secretary of the treasury further time in which to administer the emergency banking law enacted recently by congress which would have permitted immediate reopening of sound banks.

Congress has placed in President Hoover's hands the legislation he had asked to meet the United States banking emergency.

had asked to meet the United States banking emergency.

Final congressional approval came with passage by the senate after three hours' discussion which developed a bitter exchange between Senators Glass of Virginia, and Long of Louisiana. The latter contended the measure offered inadequate protection to small banks.

Earlier, the House had approved the measure with only 40 minutes debate, attesting the speed with which congress was functioning to meet the banking emergency.

The senate vote, by roll call, was 73 to seven. House action was unanimous.

Staked Gold Claim

Woman Prospectors Best Old-Time Miners Into Cariboo Country

Some of the old-time prospectors in the Cariboo gold country are looking out to newcomers in staking claims this winter, but not Mrs. Gertrude Murphy.

Mrs. Murphy has been prospecting in the Cariboo gold country for many years. Usually she spends the winter in California, but she heard of the early rush to the Cariboo and came and hurried north. She staked in over the Brown wilderness on "Inland Creek" and staked several promising claims on the headwaters of Lightning Creek where she has been the recipient of the news of the new rush.

The staked old mine who have habitually staked in the Cariboo have not been so far out. By the time they got out on the trail they were too late.

In addition to Williams Creek, where gold was first discovered more than 60 years ago to start one of the most colorful stampedes in the mining history of the continent, several other creeks have now been thoroughly staked, including Lightning, Antler and Lovers' Creek.

All through the old town of Barkerville men have been their claim.

More Transport Competition

British Firm Delivering Goods By Plane and Parachute

An enterprising British firm of people on the side of the Atlantic has just begun to learn how to deliver goods over the Atlantic and has adopted a new form of transport.

One of the largest ocean and chocolate manufacturers in the country is now delivering goods by airplane and parachute. Confections are carried all over Great Britain from the factory with parachutes attached to each lot, and when the plane reaches the nearest airport the goods are attached overhead, gathered up and conveyed to the purchaser by truck.

Parachutes are used by the Royal Air Force to supply isolated bases in the East. Goods can leave the factory and be delivered at their destination on a hand truck in the morning.
